Chorus

1 6
You're the mystery, you're the mystery,
4 5 1
That after all these years, I still don't understand

You're the mystery, you're the mystery,

And you're the only place I trust to put my hand

Poem

You came to me in my greatest despair and You held me through the night.
My greatest defender, and my closest friend,
You have been here all along.

You've ravished me in a love sweeter than these words could say.
Healed me from my deepest pain and gave me every reason to sing
With tears I will thank you, with these battle torn hands I will reach up to you,
For you have not left me

I am well because you have saved me.
Your grace has reached in and broken through every disappointment,
Reminding me of my true essence
Past and present That I am loved,
And I have been loved since the moment I breathed my first breath.
And There you came to me, before I knew you
You breathed and I inhaled true love.

My father and my friend
Comfort me even now in my pain that is deep and wide.
My wounds open and bleeding
Heal me in the places I didn't know were infected
The places I didn't know I've been effected
The places I haven't opened the door to
Because the darkness seemed too loud
Enter all the places I have kept you out.

Father of kindness,
You came to me when I thought I was too far gone
You ran to me when I was still a long way off.
When I believed restoration was impossible,
You took me in like the prodigal You came right when I needed you.

When it seemed my dreams had died at the knife of my circumstance
You resurrected them and taught me to dance.
You came and you said it's time to hope again.
